Pir-e-Kamil is a novel written by Umera Ahmad that deals with the lives of two individuals. Imama Hashim and Salar Sikander. The story spans around ten years and explores the turning points in their lives. Imama belongs to an influential Ahmadiyya Muslim family but decides to convert to Sunni Islam after being influenced by her friends. She falls in love with Dr. Jalal Ansar, but her family tries to coerce her into marrying her first cousin Asjad. Salar is a rich and eccentric boy who becomes her ally, though his motives are not entirely pure. Imama eventually finds a sanctuary under Sib-e-Ali's family and changes her name, completing her studies and working in a pharmaceutical company. Meanwhile, Salar travels to New Haven for education but later returns to Lahore, where he must confront the guilt of rejecting Imama. After years of searching, he meets her again and confesses his feelings, leading to their reconciliation. Salar Sikander, an intelligent neighbour with a photographic memory, and Imama Hashim, an Ahmadi Muslim girl who converts to Sunni Islam, are introduced in the novel Pir-e-Kamil (The Perfect Mentor). Imama's family is depicted as strict and upper-class, belonging to a sect of Islam different from mainstream Sunni beliefs. Her journey involves internal conflict, isolation, and emotional suffering after her conversion. Salar, on the other hand, is initially portrayed as an atheist or agnostic who has lost his way spiritually. Despite being exceptionally bright, he indulges in risky behaviors. The novel follows their separate lives until fate brings them together in a dramatic manner. Salar unknowingly plays a crucial role in helping Imama escape her restrictive home life. Their relationship remains distant and ambiguous for most of the story.
